

Michigan Residents Will Soon Sip on Cannabis Soda

Cannabis-Infused Sodas Coming Soon to Michigan

For many years, the most common way to consume cannabis was by smoking it in a joint or a cigarette. As legalization has spread, so too have the methods for enjoying cannabis, offering options for all preferences. Traditional joints, also known as doobies, spliffs, or blunts, remain popular, but many cannabis enthusiasts have turned to alternatives such as pipes, bongs, and vape pens. These methods offer different experiences and cater to varying tastes.

Edibles have also become a major trend, with a wide range of cannabis-infused products like gummies, candies, and cookies now readily available. But what if you want to enjoy cannabis without smoking or indulging in sweets? The answer might soon be available in your local store: cannabis-infused sodas.

Cannabis in a Can: A New Option for Michigan Consumers

Michiganders will soon have the option to drink their cannabis, thanks to a new partnership announced by Jones Soda. Known for its quirky flavors and colorful packaging, Jones Soda is stepping into the cannabis market with a line of cannabis-infused sodas set to be produced in Detroit.

These sodas will be available in two different potencies: a 20mg version and a stronger 100mg version of THC, catering to both casual users and those seeking a more intense experience. Additionally, there will be 4 oz versions with a higher concentration of 200mg THC, offered in select flavors like Berry Lemonade, MF Grape, Green Apple, and Orange & Cream.

A Unique Offering in the Expanding Cannabis Market

While cannabis-infused beverages are not entirely new—cannabis teas, beers, and wines have been available in some markets—the introduction of cannabis-infused sodas by a mainstream brand like Jones Soda is a significant development. The company is known for its innovation and unique approach to flavor, so consumers can likely expect the same creativity in their new cannabis-infused product line.

Anticipation Grows for the New Release

Although there is no official release date yet, the anticipation is building among both cannabis users and soda fans. Given Jones Soda's reputation for delivering high-quality and fun products, many are excited to see how the company will bring its signature style to the cannabis market.

For Michiganders, the wait for these cannabis-infused sodas might just be worth it, offering a new, refreshing way to enjoy cannabis in a state where the market continues to evolve and expand.

