

Human Trafficking Uncovered: Alleged Slaves Discovered in Cannabis Raid

Two Men Found Locked in Outbuilding, Potentially Victims of Modern Slavery

In a shocking revelation, two men discovered locked in an outbuilding in Graveley, Cambridgeshire, are now being treated as potential victims of modern slavery. The disturbing find came to light during a police operation targeting a cannabis factory in the area.

Cannabis Factory Seizure

Authorities were alerted to the scene after receiving reports of a suspicious smell emanating from Offord Road. Upon arrival, police uncovered a large-scale cannabis cultivation operation, seizing a total of 1,845 plants. The estimated value of the confiscated plants is staggering, exceeding £1.5 million.

Alarming Discovery

However, amidst the discovery of the illicit cannabis factory, authorities made an even more concerning find. Two men, aged 34 and 35, were found locked inside an outbuilding on the premises. It's believed that these individuals were being held against their will and forced to tend to the cannabis plants.

Modern Day Slavery Unveiled

The investigation launched in response to this harrowing discovery underscores the insidious connection between cannabis cultivation and modern-day slavery. Inspector Colin Norden, from the Huntingdonshire Neighbourhood Team, emphasized the grave impact of such criminal activities on communities.

Impact of Cannabis Cultivation on Slavery and Organized Crime

Inspector Norden stated, "This highlights the impact that cannabis cultivation has in relation to modern-day slavery and the funding of organized crime. They are inextricably linked and neither has any place in our communities." The exploitation of vulnerable individuals for the purposes of criminal enterprise is a reprehensible act that must be met with swift and decisive action.

Call for Vigilance and Collaboration

In light of this disturbing incident, authorities urge members of the public to remain vigilant and report any suspicions or information regarding drug activity in their communities. Collaboration between law enforcement and citizens is essential in combatting the scourge of modern slavery and organized crime.

Seeking Justice

Those responsible for perpetrating such heinous crimes against vulnerable individuals must be held accountable. Inspector Norden affirmed, “Those who take advantage of others for organized criminality can expect to be brought to justice.”

Conclusion

The discovery of two men potentially held captive in a cannabis factory serves as a stark reminder of the dark underbelly of illicit drug operations. As law enforcement agencies continue their investigations, it is imperative that communities stand together in condemning such reprehensible acts and work towards eradicating modern slavery and organized crime from our midst.

Email: info@cannabisriskmanager.com | Phone: +415-226-4060

© Copyright 2025 Cannabis Risk Manager. All Rights Reserved