

The Fake Delivery Dilemma: Inside the Bust of a Cannabis Operation Hiding in Plain Sight

Fake Amazon Van Leads to OBN's Bust of Illegal Marijuana Grow in Lindsey, Oklahoma

In a recent operation that underscores the evolving tactics of criminal organizations, the Oklahoma Bureau of Narcotics (OBN) has dismantled yet another illegal marijuana grow, thanks to a fake Amazon delivery van. The bust, which took place in Lindsey, Oklahoma, marks a significant step in the state's ongoing efforts to curb illicit drug operations.

Investigation Initiation: Uncovering Suspicious Activity

The investigation began in January when a Missouri state trooper pulled over the driver of a suspicious Amazon van for multiple traffic violations shortly after crossing state lines. Upon closer inspection, authorities quickly determined that the vehicle was a counterfeit. With the driver's consent, law enforcement conducted a search, revealing nearly 250 pounds of packaged marijuana allegedly obtained from Bright Stones LLC in Lindsey.

Deceptive Tactics Exposed: The Role of Fake Delivery Vans

Mark Woodward, spokesperson for the OBN, highlighted the deceptive nature of these fake delivery vans, noting, "These types of delivery vans will blend into a neighborhood where people are used to seeing and so a criminal organization has the opportunity to basically hide their activity in plain sight."

Cracking Down on Fraudulent Practices: OBN's Seizure at Bright Stones LLC

Further scrutiny into Bright Stones LLC revealed fraudulent licensing practices through a straw ownership scheme. On Monday, OBN agents executed a raid on the facility, seizing 9,143 marijuana plants and 215 pounds of processed cannabis. Woodward estimated the potential street value of the seized drugs to be around $36 million.

Continued Investigation: Pursuing Connections to Other Illicit Operations

While no arrests have been made thus far, officials believe the suspect is connected to other illicit operations under investigation by state authorities. Woodward assured, "We do anticipate putting this person in custody very soon."

Conclusion: A Stern Warning to Would-Be Criminals

In conclusion, Woodward issued a stern warning to would-be criminals, stating, "Don't come to Oklahoma if you're a criminal because you're going to go to jail." The bust serves as a testament to the diligence and effectiveness of law enforcement agencies in combating illegal drug activities within the state.

Email: info@cannabisriskmanager.com | Phone: +415-226-4060

© Copyright 2025 Cannabis Risk Manager. All Rights Reserved