

Meghan Markle Denies Rumors of Netflix Show Filmed on Cannabis Farm

Meghan Markle is gearing up for the launch of her new cooking show on Netflix, but recent rumors swirling around suggest that the series is being filmed on a cannabis farm. The Duchess of Sussex, however, has swiftly denied these speculations.

Duchess Denies Cannabis Farm Filming Location

Despite initial reports, Meghan Markle has made it clear that her upcoming Netflix cooking show will not be filmed on a cannabis farm. The Duchess aims to celebrate the joys of cooking, gardening, entertaining, and friendship through her latest project.

Hopes Dashed for a Glimpse into Montecito Mansion

Many fans were excited at the prospect of catching a glimpse into Meghan's Montecito mansion, where she resides with Prince Harry and their children. However, it seems that the cooking show's filming location is set elsewhere.

Clarification on Filming Locations

Initially, reports suggested that the production team had selected two locations: a mansion owned by philanthropists Tom and Sherrie Cipolla and a cannabis farm in Carpinteria owned by the Van Wingerden family. However, Meghan's team has clarified that the filming will take place at a residence, with no cannabis plants nearby.

Meghan's Venture into Lifestyle Branding

Earlier this year, Meghan Markle announced her foray into lifestyle branding with the launch of her brand, American Riviera Orchard. With an Instagram account boasting over 617K followers and a website inviting fans to join a waitlist, Meghan is already making waves in the industry.

Setting the Record Straight

Despite the swirling rumors, Meghan Markle remains focused on her new cooking show and her budding lifestyle brand. With a commitment to celebrating the joys of cooking and community, the Duchess is ready to share her passion with audiences worldwide.

By debunking the rumors surrounding the filming location, Meghan is ensuring that the spotlight remains on her culinary creations and the positive message behind her latest venture.